

Chilliwack Cosmetic Dentist

Traditional dentistry focuses on preventing and/or treating oral disease. Cosmetic dentistry is more of an optional service for the reason that it simply focuses on improving the look of a person's teeth, mouth and smile. Cosmetic dentistry may also provide restorative benefits. For instance, dental fillings are a common procedure used to treat decayed teeth. Previously, the majority of dental fillings were composed primarily of gold, amalgam and other materials that left discernible dark spots on the teeth. Today, you can choose fillings that closely match the color of your teeth. The majority of these fillings are constructed of composite materials or porcelain. Consequently, the majority of people now notice very little difference between their fillings and their natural teeth.

These advancements in technology have ensured that most visitors can expect a more long-lasting and predictable service than ever before. Additionally, dentists are now using more conservative cosmetic dentistry procedures to preserve as much of your natural tooth structure as possible, depending upon your specific clinical situation. A few examples of Cosmetic Dentistry Treatments are:

1. Implants (Dental)

Dental implants are artificial tooth root replacements that are used as a part of prosthetic dentistry in order to compensate for tooth decay. Often the result is not merely an enhanced smile, but also a more youthful look, as lost teeth cause the face to collapse, making you seem older.

2. Dental Inlays and Onlays

Inlays and onlays can be made from porcelain or composite materials. They are a durable and cosmetic way to provide fillings to teeth experiencing tooth decay.

3. Composite Bonding

Chipped, broken, discolored or decayed teeth may be repaired or have their appearance corrected using a practice known as composite bonding. A dental composite material with the appearance of enamel and dentin is applied into the cavity or on top of the surface of a tooth, where it is then sculpted into form, contoured and hardened with a high-intensity light. The outcome is a restoration that blends invisibly with the remainder of the adjoining tooth structure and the rest of your natural teeth to make a healthy, bright smile.

4. Full Mouth Reconstruction

While consulting with you on the subject of a smile make-over to primarily enhance the esthetic appearance of your smile, your dentist might ascertain that there is a requirement to offer crucial treatment to rectify practical problems with your bite, muscles, teeth and bone structure. If you need complete mouth restoration, the materials accessible today make it possible for your dentist to provide you with durable, functional and clinically sound treatments that also appear natural.

5. Teeth Whitening Procedures

Teeth whitening is perhaps the most commonly recommended cosmetic dentistry procedure. Teeth are frequently blemished from smoking, food, drink (coffee, tea or red wine) or poor oral hygiene. Bleaching the teeth can improve the look of your smile.

6. Dental Veneers

Composite or porcelain laminates that are adhesively bonded to the surface of a tooth to remedy and repair chips and cracks will improve a worn appearance or severe tooth yellowing. Veneers might also be recommended if you have gaps in your teeth or if you have not had success with teeth whitening.
